Researchers at the University of Stirling are exploring the relationship between Social Media Use and the Quality of Online Friendships in Autistic and Non-Autistic Adults

We hope this will inform our understanding of the trends of social media use and its effects on online friendships and help us explore the need to belong and loneliness as factors that may effect both, social media use and online friendships.

The study involves the completion of a 20-minute online survey.
Participation in this study is voluntary.

We invite autistic and non-autistic adults to take part in this study.
