New: Joint Lego[®]-based Therapy for Adults and Children

Workshop and Weekly Joint Sessions
For adults, and children on the autistic spectrum

Our Sessions

Creatovators are running a course of Lego-based Therapy Sessions for adults and children aged 5+.

Lego-based Therapy is a fun way of helping children on the autistic spectrum learn social skills. By working in small teams with support, the children learn to take on roles, take turns, listen, talk and cooperate better.

Many parents, carers and support workers have used the approach with their children and seen a huge difference.

This new course starts with an initial adult-only workshop in Lego®-based Therapy with 7 follow-up sessions for the adult with a child. To begin, we recommend that if you are a parent, you work with someone else's child before working with your own. However, by the end you will know how to play with Lego® with a child in a safe and fun way.

Please note these are structured sessions which help promote social skills, not just a club. We recommend that all sessions are attended to gain the full benefit, but realise this is not always possible.

"We have seen a real improvement in my daughter's ability to compromise and her new problem-solving skills are transferable to many situations, now including school." Parent

With thanks to the Scottish Government Communities Health and Wellbeing Fund in partnership with East Dunbartonshire Voluntary Action for funding the adult places.
