Introduction

Fife One Stop Shop offers people with autism, their families and professionals information and advice about autism, the kinds of support services that are available in the area, and how to access them. As well as acting as an information hub, the One Stop Shops work closely with other groups and agencies, collaborating to understand and respond to the needs of the autism community. Our approach is based on an understanding that autism is multidimensional and that each individual and family may face unique challenges. As varying levels of support are required, we will provide information and advice that is meaningful to them. Our experienced and friendly one stop shop teams provide:

- Support to access the services you need, whether they are in the community or autism specific.
- Guidance to overcome barriers such as an unaddressed diagnosis and delayed intervention of support.
- A safe and friendly place to speak confidentially to someone who understands autism.
- One-to-one sessions, workshops and group activities for individuals, parents/carers, children, families and professionals.

We welcome feedback and will include any suggested improvements and new information in future revisions of this information pack.

Information

Scottish Autism (http://www.scottishautism.org/) is one of the largest providers of autism-specific services in Scotland and a leading authority and advocate for good autism practice. We exist to help those diagnosed with autism to lead full and enriched lives and become valuable members of the community they live in. We also seek to share our knowledge and expertise with parents, carers and other professionals in order to support the development of skills and strategies needed to provide the best care and support for people with autism.

About Autism http://www.scottishautism.org/about-autism/

What is Autism http://www.understandautism.org

Right Click http://www.scottishautism.org/family-and-professional-support/right-click-programme/ is an online programme aimed at helping parents better understand and manage some of the challenges which can arise for their children and the wider family. The programmes are focused on providing support to parents of both young children and teenagers as this can be an especially challenging time for families.

Autism Advice Line http://www.scottishautism.org/family-and-professional-support/advice-line/ supports parents, family members, individuals and professionals looking for information, advice and support.

The National Autistic Society (NAS) www.autism.org.uk provides a wealth of information which is well worth exploring.

Autism Services Directory is the UK’s most comprehensive directory of services and support for people with an autism spectrum disorder, their families, and people who work with them. Click on the link below to search for Autism Services in the Fife area:-

Autism Network Scotland www.autismnetworkscotland.org.uk acts as an information sharing hub to connect and communicate with those interested in the field of autism. They are a signpost for autism professionals and practitioners, people with autism, their families and carers toward examples of good practice, resources and useful information. If you register with them, they send you regular email updates on news and events around autism, including training and knowledge sharing sessions.
Books, DVD's and Games
There are a large number of books available about Autism Spectrum Disorder (ASD) and related subjects and also a number of DVD's for those who prefer to watch rather than read. There are also an increasing number of fun games to encourage emotional and social development and communication skills.

Jessica Kingsley Publishing (JKP) [http://www.jkp.com/uk/] is a specialist publisher who has an Autism and Asperger Syndrome Catalogue.

Education and Learning
The majority of children and young people on the Autism Spectrum are educated at their local nursery, primary or secondary school. Schools are increasingly developing awareness and skills in supporting pupils. Each school has a Learning Support Teacher (LSS) who will have knowledge of autism.

In addition schools and parents have access to guidance and advice from the school’s link educational psychologist. All schools in Fife have a link educational psychologist who works closely with school staff. The educational psychologist can become involved where there are concerns about a child’s educational progress. The aim is to overcome barriers in the learning environment so that young people can be successfully included in their class, school and community. Educational psychologists can work directly with pupils, parents/carers, school staff and other professionals as well as providing consultation and training for teachers and support staff.

The school leadership team can also request further advice, support and training from other teams, for example the Autism Spectrum Information and Support Team (ASIST) in consultation with the schools Educational Psychologist and parents/carers.

ASIST can also work with the school staff in an advisory and consultancy capacity to help support pupils, particularly those present challenging behaviour. Pupils on the autism spectrum can be supported in a variety of ways. For example:-

- using symbolised communication ie. PECS, boardmaker
- help provide structure and organisation ie visual timetables
- changes to the physical or social environment i.e. work areas, social stories
- awareness of sensory processing differences
- individualised learning approaches
- use of Information and Communications Technology (ICT)
- support from a Pupil Support Assistant
Some pupils will require a more adapted and specialised learning environment. This can be done by access to the Pupil Support Service, within a Department of Additional Support Needs and specialised schools. If the parent is concerned about their child, or the support they are receiving, they should contact the head teacher of the child’s school.

Enquire www.enquire.org.uk is the Scottish advice service for additional support for learning. They provide information to help parents make the right choices about their children’s education by offering impartial advice. They have lots of practical advice, information and fact sheets about the education and additional support needs system in Scotland.

Education Scotland www.educationscotland.gov.uk is a Scottish Government website with a wealth of information on supporting learning within the Education System including those with additional support needs. Search for autism toolbox on this site to be guided to information on this valuable resource which has been developed to provide up-to-date information, from research and practical experience which is easy to understand and apply in the classroom, playground and home. It is essential reading for teachers who have a child with an autism spectrum disorder in their class.

Autism Toolbox website www.autismtoolbox.co.uk is brought to you by the Scottish Government in partnership with Scottish Autism with support from Autism Network Scotland. This online resource is to support the inclusion of children and young people with autism spectrum disorder in mainstream education services in Scotland. As well as introducing and describing some of the more common challenges a pupil with autism might face, it provides real life case studies from Scottish schools and practical examples of supports that you can translate and use in your own school setting. It also signposts you to other websites you may find useful.

Parentzone www.educationscotland.gov.uk/parentzone aims to develop partnerships between parents and schools and advice on how parents can support their child’s education.
